Teacher Education Program's Diversity in Educator Preparation

Our teacher education programs values and respects human diversity in all of its forms: ability, age, race, class, culture, gender, ethnicity, family structure, religion, and sexual orientation. We believe societal and economic differences are facts of life but tolerance and understanding of the differences is learned behavior. Our educator preparation program is designed to help our candidates develop an understanding and appreciation of human diversity, and to provide our candidates with a foundation of effective, culturally competent practice.

Student Focused Initiatives:

Within our conceptual framework, valuing diversity is an important professional dispositions which has been integrated throughout multiple required courses. Diversity is introduced and explored in EDUC 311, Diversity, Culture and Education in a Pluralistic Society. This course explores the intersection between education, democracy and diversity in American schooling.

EDUC 301: Language, Culture and Learning focuses on diversity in the classroom including English Language Learners, bilingual education, and culturally and linguistically responsive instruction.

EDUC 302: Characteristics and Methods for Teaching Exceptional Children focus on strategies for accommodating exceptional learners in general education classes through the use of effective academic and behavioral instruction.

The clinical experiences for pre-service teachers include candidates understanding of diversity and how culturally-competent teaching experiences shape their approach to learning. The clinicals (EDUC 301, 302, 303, 400) encourage social interaction and active engagements to create a positive learning community.

The Office of Teacher Education uses the current data on school demographics reported by the Illinois State Board of Education's Edsight Card public site to intentionally place candidates in a clinical center for EDUC 302 that has a higher percentage of EL learners, locally diverse students, or socio-economically diverse students. All EDUC 303 candidates are placed in a classroom where students with disabilities are being educated with their mainstream peers.

Organization Development

All teacher candidates are evaluated in each clinical using a common dispositions rubric that includes valuing human diversity, which may be reflected in the candidates’ attitudes and behaviors toward fellow candidates as students and colleagues. Toward ethnographic students, colleagues and others, and toward subject matter. Data from these rubrics can be used to benchmark candidates’ progress towards valuing diversity.

Human Resources/Personnel Development

Clinical Supervisors update evaluation rubrics and assess intern reliability. Learning to evaluate candidates provides professional development for Clinical Supervisors and Coordinating Teachers within our partner schools who also utilize these evaluation rubrics.
